LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PURVES moved that leave of absence during the present session be granted to Mr. Edward Combes, C.M.G., one of the members for the electorate of East Macquarie.

homes. Seeing that there were so many members who desired to speak, he would suggest to the hon. gentleman at the head of the Government the propriety of adjourning at the dinner hour.

Dr. BOES said ever since he had held a seat in the Chamber he had always been able to leave Sydney on Friday night, and if he did not get away he would have to stay in town over Sunday. They must meet next week under any

On the order of the day being read for the resumption of the debate on the address in reply to the speech of his Excellency the Governor, instrument which if any illiterate, coarse-minded, or mentally lopsided individual breathed, it would not produce a very intelligible, much less melodious, sound. The action of Mr. Dalley in offering troops before consulting Parliament, or even before knowing whether such troops could be raised, had no doubt met with some adverse criticism; but the noble and spirited response with which the call to arms had been met from one end of the country to the other, had plainly and clearly undertaking, and from officials who were altogether unnoctoneary. Well, he believed it is to a certain extent unconstitutional, they all knew it would be an expensive undertaking, and, strictly speaking, it might have not been necessary; but the offer so generously made, and which had been accepted with thanks by our Sovereign, had awakened a spirit of pride and satisfaction in every Australian heart, and our men can now go forth into active service—into the battle-field—feeling assured, feeling confident.

left our shores, that they were greater in proportion to the inhabitants of this colony than the army under Lord Wolsley was to the population of the mother country. New South Wales and her sister colonies had all along enjoyed these great and inestimable blessings and advantages which necessarily flowed from connection with such a noble and mighty Power as the mother country; and what had we given in return? Simply nothing, if we excepted a few paltry orders for Manchester and Birmingham goods, which and men who ought to know better—that we are sending our troops to the Sudan to wage war against a country with which we are at peace; but he said, How can we be at peace? Are not Queen Victoria's enemies the enemies of New South Wales, wherever and whoever they are? and he said, indignantly, that the persons who utter such sentiments should show on their marks, their disguises, and openly avow themselves to be enemies. It would, at any rate, be more traffic. England had in the past spent large sums of money to put down slavery, and had endeavoured to put her hands on the very source of it in Egypt, and yet there were honourable members who said that England upheld slavery. It was true that the English planters had been engaged in it in the West Indies, but when the public conscience

Government would take advantage of the wave of military enthusiasm which had swept over the country, and organise forces here, for in his opinion this would compensate for any slight breach of the constitution which had been committed. The old country had taken a wise and proper step in maintaining the straight line of communication between the colonies and Europe, and he hoped we would never regret assisting her to do so.

British Government in the Sudan. The Minister of the Interior, Mr. J. H. Thomas, said that the Government had no intention of making any such offer, and that the Government had no intention of making any such offer. He said that the Government had no intention of making any such offer, and that the Government had no intention of making any such offer.

tion. They claimed that the emergency did not justify the Acting Colonial Secretary in pledging this Parliament to the expenditure which would be incurred over the Sudan expedition. This question was controversial in misrepresentation, and was fed by untruth. Mr. Dalley, in his first minute to the Governor, said that he could supply 500 effective men from the ranks of our volunteers, but this was a misrepresentation, since we had no volunteers. There had been announced the action of the public men of the colony and ordered the Chief Justice going on the platform at the Exhibition Building to support the action of the Government in this matter. It was also a shame that any gentlemen coming forward with the desire to propose an amendment should have been refused a hearing, and thrust from the platform. He denied that everybody was in favour of the Government's action. The meeting at the Exhibition Building was not in favour of it, nor the meeting at St. Leonards, nor in only—he was the representative of a nominee Chamberlain—body that had no power to initiate legislation imposing taxation upon the people; and yet this act of his would necessitate additional taxation. He wondered, if Mrs. Dalley thought the people were so much in favour of this action, that he had not consented to contest the electorate of Argyle, where he would have met the man whom he had called from his grave. (Laughter.) Why had he not called for the advocate, at least of the

that the Government pushed forward the British cause as a first thing, and said it would not bind the people to anything. The longer the people thought over this question the stronger would be their condemnation of the action of the Government, and this is not because they were not in unison with their brethren in England, because they would assist her whenever it was really necessary to do so. People talked about this movement being an indication et with a response which did honour to the colony; and a great wave of enthusiasm at once rolled over the land, and broke into the hearts of the people with such force as has never before been known here. To that, he had no doubt a death of the gallant Gordon very powerfully contributed, and the desire to assist in avenging the murder gave a ly offered to vote with the Government. Mr. DALLIES' offer was a generous one, and was accepted in the spirit in which it was offered. The result was that an unparalleled degree of enthusiasm was evoked throughout the colony, and men volunteered on every side. He desired to point out, however, that the troops were not ordered to go by the Government. They volunteered to go, and the Government even took steps to prevent men from going when their wives and relatives were averse to it. What

Mr. HOLBOROW : It would be a bad thing for the colony if a standing army were established here. The hon. member then entered into a lengthy personal explanation with regard to his connection with the volunteer forces. He said that the Government had ill-treated him by not giving him the lieutenantancy-colonelcy of the Continent, to which he was justly entitled when Lieutenant-Colonel brigade Office. The Colonel then told him that Mr. Wright declined to confirm his appointment on account of his unpopularity with the remainder of the Contingent, and advised him to withdraw his application. He declined to withdraw it, and from then until now he had received no further explanation than that he was unpopular. From Saturday until Monday his name was before his brother officers as a junior lieutenant-colonel with the Contingent, and he was recommended for order when he was such action as these officers had taken. They should have written to the commanding officer or the Colonial Secretary making specific charges against him, and he should have been afforded the opportunity of answering them to the cabinet; but this course had not been followed. He was not an officer who had been pitched into the position he held. He had earned it by 25 years of hard service, having

Mr. HOLBROW continuing, said he felt that he had been enlightened, and he wished to crave the indulgence of the house, in order that he might make an explanation which would show how he obtained the position he held.

Mr. SPEAKER said he did not think the hon. member understood his remarks. He supposed that every man-

This proved that the colony of New South Wales was much at war as any country of the ancient State.

"And the power of adversity would be his own to claim, he added not be that they should bear the burden and not be entitled the power to administer. If they drew separation from the mother country the feeling must grow either from the fact of England having inflicted some wrong, or from selfish motives. Looking at the question whether England did them any wrong, he contended that the free institutions they enjoyed were due to their repeated requests to dis-land ruled over people of other nationalities, the nations did not rule over Englishmen. It because of any unkindness on the part of England towards them that there was any to split off from her? He thought that the benefits enjoyed from her were the greatest they could possibly be. Were they going to lop off those benefits, by giving England? Of what other nation could they be? She had taught nations to be free, and they had to keep up any army or navy. Her latent power was so great that she was safe from danger. If England and her colonies were federated they would be as formidable or more so than the United States, and as unassailable. Their power on the ocean would be irresistible. He believed that at no distant date the United States would join the federation. The result of such a union would be peace and prosperity within their borders, and the triumph of their principles on the other side of the Atlantic.

tion to enforce justice and avert wars by such means, or, to bring about a universal system of arbitration, was worth trying for, and the recent act of the Government was an enormous step in the right direction. (Applause.) The blood of General Gordon, shed in the freedom of slavery, was a cement that must yet tend to the Empire and bring about Imperial federation. (Applause.) But from the strict logical position that we have nothing to do with the Queen's wars, what was the real posi-

and consequently could not complain if war followed. Referring to insinuations made as to the character and aims of some of our officers, the speaker took exception to a remark made by the senior member for Newcastle on Wednesday, in which he characterized Sir Samuel Baker as a mere adventurer. If that hon. gentleman had read a

His old leaders, Sir John Robertson and Sir John Gorton, were men of a different type. They had heard men talk about the necessity of peace, peace, and joyous living; but he maintained that a wholesome, healthy thing that they had a little war spirit in them to take them out of such sluggishness. He had said who were against the movement. Now, here for it? They had the Ministry, the present Government who enjoyed the confidence of the community, and Sir John Robertson, the oldest politician, and the

tion to the act. In short, they had all those who were the most intellectual, most lofty, and best in the country in favour of this great national act. And he was to say they had an instance of the way in which they had sunk their differences when they saw Sir John Jennings and the head of the Orange Lodge of South Wales sitting side by side at the St. Patrick's dinner. He could not help expressing the admiration he felt at the tone of the gentleman who took so prominent a part in the proceedings.

CAMERON said he had listened to the hon. gentleman for fully an hour and a-half, and must admit that he saw any argument in his oration. The hon. gentleman had shown a want of charity to those opposed to him, and his classification of the Government had been as ungenerous as it was unjust. He was not prepared to approve of the action of the Government had he assuming as well as its serious side. He was not prepared to approve of the action of the Government had he assuming as well as its serious side.

He believed that men could differ from the nation proper at the same time as be loyal as those who were loyal to the nation. He repudiated and scorned the utterance of the man, member of Congress, Mr. Buchanan. He was a subject, and would do all he could to preserve the union between Great Britain and the colonies. At the same time, he did not believe that it was a crime to separate from the mother-country. He did

Then they were told there were a few democrats opposing the movement; but he did not say that if the people of the colony were polled, it would be found that opposition came from more than a

He contended that the State had no right to call upon the men as railway men to subscribe; but that was only one of the dodges he resorted to. He would also ask them whether he noticed the manner in which the metropolitan press in reference to the subscription lists in con-

number of other places it had been promulgated. They had unmistakable evidence that the generally were opposed to the steps taken by the agent, and he contended that the majority in favour of the Government would not represent the people of the colony. He had been invited in to the meeting held in connection with the Patriotic Association, but the first resolution proposed at that meeting was that the Association should know that,

ITHERS said he was glad to be able to take that opportunity of placing his opinions respecting the action on record, and of expressing his pleasure at the Government in offering and despatching the Sudan. He could not find words to express his satisfaction at the action of the Government in taking the step they had done. He never dreamt, when he heard of the departure of troops, that the offer would have reached the

had been carried out in a very creditable way, and were that colonists would readily consent to pay the cost of the expedition, and he felt certain that this would have a beneficial effect upon the country. Not only the ideas had originated, it had benefited them, and the display made had been a most manly one, and the men who should return from the Sudan would be drilled and trained, and would form the nucleus of a new order of instruction in the Sudan. He deprecated year ended August, 1883. One of those parties, the Russian expedition to the mouth of the Lena, remained in the post during the past year, and the accounts which have reached us at intervals prove that they have been doing much good work in the investigation of the meteorological phenomena they started observations under Dr. A. A. Dobrover during 1884, and promise to contribute materially to our knowledge of the meteorology of the Chukotka and Kamchatka regions. The results of the observations, especially in the United States, of the issue of storm warnings and cold wave predictions, deserves to be noted. The publication of the results of Dr. Sophus Tromholt's investigations of the meteorological conditions in Finland, and in Iceland, was a meteorological event of some importance during the year.

society has in view. The publications during the year were original to notice several volumes of the Challenger Reports and the completion of Sir Richard Owen's great work on Pisces Vertebres; several instalments of the Vega Scientific Reports; Dr. Jonck's Scientific Papers; a new volume of Sir William Huxley's Popular Science; a new volume of Professor Stokes's work on Chemical Science of some importance; "World Life" by Professor Winchell, of the United States; and a new edition of the "Vestiges of Creation."

An event of considerable interest to English science is the retirement for a period of our greatest living biologist, the President of the Royal Society, Professor Huxley. Sir Richard Owen, who at the end of 1883 retired from the post of Superintendent of the Natural History Department, which he held so long, has found a successor of losses to advance during the year these have been many—the most notable, perhaps, that of the great French chemist, M. Berthollet, who has been elected to the Académie des Sciences. Adolphe Wurtz. Chemistry has sustained other serious losses in Dr. Angus Smith and Mr. Henry Watts. On the flat of departed names, we have Dr. J. J. Berzelius, Dr. Julius Schmidt, of Athens, and Klinkerhofer of Göttingen; among mathematicians, Tschubner and Möbius; physicists, Boltzmann, Breuer, Wright, of Chesham; Hoche of Bonn; W. G. B. Schimper, of Würzburg; W. G. B. Schimper, of Vienna; Quintino Sella, of Rome; biologists, Al. Thomson; geographers, Guyot, Leban, Pogge, W. G. B. Schimper, of Würzburg; and Dr. J. J. Berzelius, and the secretary of the Royal Society of that city were the events of some scientific interest. We can only say that the year has been a year of great activity and progress in the country during the past year, but on the multitudinous applications of science which have claimed attention, it is impossible to do more than say that the whole has been one of much average good work.

personal character and seamanship of the shipmaster. In the earlier days all the foreign carrying trade was done by sailing vessels, and a shipmaster who valued his name and success as a seaman would take the cargo and crew as much on his care and attention as he depended on the cargo to be fully carried and delivered, as upon the rapidity of his passage, though the cargo was insured. The shipmaster was looked upon as the owner of the cargo, and the cargo was as it too often is the case now, "lost or found" at his discretion. The Sydney shipmaster was a very valuable navigator, yet two Sydney shipmasters who made the passage through it annually, and always successfully, had so established their reputation for skill and speed that they were able to command a higher freight and lower premium by the ships they commanded than by others. Both men are still in Sydney, though he retired from the sea, their names being Charles Harold and John Macleay. Formerly the Sydney shipmaster was a Lloyd's policy was new, the paper stated, the basis of which all colonial policies were founded. It was doubtful whether they had been wise in departing from the old policy, but it was a policy which had been established in his language was quaint, and in some respects almost obsolete, all doubtful points in it had been the subject of long discussions which had resulted in no definite conclusion; and Mr. Storey had pointed out in a previous paper, some future Judges or Judges should reverse a decision. But in this, as in old-established decisions of a similar kind, the old policy was followed, and the new one was expected that an office should take risks upon goods until they were on board the ship, and additional risks were attached to the marine policy, and the local companies had to yield to the innovation. The old policy was followed, and the new policy was also made. The paper also gave a very interesting account of the dangers which were met with by vessels passing through Torres Straits in the early days and the various forms of rebuffs. The increased dangers resulting from steamers running against tide in that water as long length a new island off the coast of Iceland deserves mention as it does Dr. Thorodden's geological explorations in the north-west of Scotland. He has been busy with himself all length in Nature. The geological surveys in the north-west of Scotland have made, in the course of the last few years, a considerable advance. The chief, Dr. A. Geikie, considers one of the most recent geological events of recent times. It upsets the conception as to the order of occurrence of the geological events in the north-west of Scotland, and is based on Murchison's investigations, and has revealed a phenomenon of mechanical displacement—displacement of their sliver, which has been the subject of a paper by Dr. A. Geikie, Professor Hearn, of Zurich, addressed a similar form to account for certain geological phenomena in Central Europe. Dr. A. Geikie, in his paper, has given a confirmation by us accurate and cautious an observer as Dr. A. Geikie the possibility of such an occurrence will probably lead to Prof. Hearn's hypothesis of a displacement of the whole of the continent. The one-line geological survey map, noticed in our columns at the time, is also a notable event in British geology. Messrs. Murray and Emswiler, in their paper, have shown that the geological map may be regarded as an important contribution to geology as well as to biology.

The departments of physics and chemistry, which seem to be getting more and more intermingled, we do not know that there is anything very remarkable to record. have already indicated the reasonings go to show that the time has not yet ed for a federal Australian navy under management, and that our best plan for present is to take advantage to the fullest t of the Imperial connection, and to e the naval resources of the mother ry, while at the same time taking ourselves all the burden of the ase. This arrangement would be econoas well as efficient, for it is perfectly in line with that a separate naval establishment would cost us more than paying for a fraction of the Imperial navy. There would be an additional advantage that it would save us a great deal of intercolonial friction. We are only too familiar with the difficulties we encounter in working in common, and these difficulties would be intensified in dealing with so important a matter as the management of the naval force. When we come to one common centre of government, we may consider the expediency of a local navy; but so long as we are nothing but a union of separate and independent States, we may be thankful that we have this opportunity of leaving the defence in Imperial hands.

At the same time, though that is the course usually recommended by common sense and intended self-interest, it is also a course is open to some objections, and there are dangers especially that have to be met against. In the first place, it is very important that if we are to depend on the imperial navy, we should take care to see that old ships altogether behind the age are not foisted off upon us. There will be a very natural tendency on the part of the navy to adopt this course. The old ships are not so good as the new ones, but it is not that anything is good enough for the ice, prevails there as elsewhere. We nearly always had old and slow-going ice sent out here, and until lately they were good enough for what they had to do. When the Nelson arrived the Wolverine was the flag-ship, and we all know what she is worth as a steamer or a fighting ship. A ship is a kind of property that very rapidly depreciates, and it is not in human nature to be willing to destroy property that is worth anything.

born out, and yet that is not good enough. We have a fleet of ships, but many of them are old, and insufficiently armed ships will, in the end, be of no use for our purpose. We have special work to do, and the ships to be employed must have special fitness for the work. The most essential qualification will be speed. Our coastal defence is very largely a mobile business, and our war ships must be able to go faster than any vessel likely to come out here to attack us. The objection to building ships of very high speed is of ing a ship not very different from the economical one—that it means enormous consumption of coal, which is great expense, and very short voy- at a time. That is a very good why ships of war meant for service should be constructed a very strict regard to economy in the fuel. But our ships will be wanted special, and not for general service, and are under no particular necessity for ing much about the fuel. We have an abundance of coal, and our coaling operations will always be close to some friendly port where they can refill their bunkers. It is precisely the advantage we have in the matter of defence, and we ought to utilise it to the utmost, so that privateers who may come to visit us, however light-keeled they may be, will arrive after a voyage. Coaling for them always be a matter of great difficulty, economy in the use of fuel will be to a thing of supreme importance. But shall fight close to our own resources, in the matter of fuel those resources are limitless. We can afford, therefore, to have high speed, and this an advantage we must utilize it to the utmost. Cruisers that can overhaul a vessel that may be sent here, and carry-one or two long-range guns, are the vessels want, and if it is necessary, they must be
